Contents

List of figures, plates and tables
List of contributors
Acknowledgements
Foreword Rane Willerslev
Introduction: In the Darkest of Days: Tracing human sacrifice in southern Scandinavian prehistory
Matthew J. Walsh, Marianne Moen, Sean O'Neill, Svein H. Gullbekk and Rane Willerslev

1 Noble hunter-gatherers and 'cruel' farmers – a discussion of the evidence of human sacrifices during the Mesolithic and Neolithic in South Scandinavia
Lasse Sørensen and Poul Otto Nielsen
2 Societies that sacrifice? Examining the potential for attendant sacrifices in the Nordic Bronze Age
Matthew J. Walsh and Samantha S. Reiter
3 Human sacrifices and human remains – ultimate sacrifices?
Pernille Pantmann
4 Naked or clothed? Bog bodies and the value of clothing in the Late Iron Age
Ulla Mannering
5 Human sacrifice and execution? A brief forensic medical and archaeological perspective on some of the Danish bog bodies
Niels Lynnerup and Pauline Asingh
6 Six human skulls in a bog: Svennum – a 1st to 3rd century AD sacrificial bog
Sidsel Wåhlin
7 Haraldskær Woman under a new light: Bog bodies, martial rituals and value
Mads Ravn
8 Figuring out bodies in bogs and other watery places: Posthumanism, figurations and ecological relations

Christina Fredengren
9 Thrown stone for flesh and bone? ‘White’ stones in sacrificial context in Iron Age Scandinavia
Matthew J. Walsh, Pernille Pantmann and Marianne Moen
10 ‘Better not to pray than to sacrifice too much’: Human sacrifice and its alternatives in Northern Europe AD 750–1050
Bo Jensen
11 Regulated deviancy – ritual executions at Viking Age Tissø as indications of a complex judicial culture
Mads D. Jessen and Jesper Olsen
12 Human sacrifice in Old Norse skaldic poetry
Klas Wikström af Edholm